

The Light Path
Lecture #6

The Light Beings Speak

I ask the divine light guide us and protect us. I call forth the beings of light and love, truth and wisdom. And I ask now that all that we need for the divine enfoldment of our souls, on all levels of our existence, manifest peacefully and lovingly.

Yes, we welcome you, we want to let you know that we will be working on some of your energy fields while we talk, if we may.

We would like to speak today on a continuation of what we have been speaking on, which is aspects of the change process. We have spoken on the power of letting go of the death process and the power of bringing in the life process. What we will speak of today is the creative process, of allowing chaos in your life as a point of change --- not only as a point of change, but as a map for change. For part of the truth of the universe is that change is ever present. It is the only reality that is ever present in all of the universe. The universe is an ever expanding, growing, changing being. Yes, we say being, for the universe is conscious in its own form of consciousness, as you are conscious and live within it. As the universe changes and expands, all those who share the universal space also change and grow. So the one dictate for your existence is to become what you are not, to become who you are not, right now, to keep becoming, to exist in the movement of becoming.

The way to discover where the change process in your life is most dynamically going to imprint upon you, is by moving into the chaotic aspect of your life. Many humans try to ignore their chaotic feelings, chaotic thoughts, chaotic physical state, and chaotic actions and try to move within their stable aspect that they call peacefulness. But peacefulness is just creative action that has been fulfilled.

It is in the chaos that one sees where the energy needs to change. It is in the chaos that one sees where light needs to move. It is in the chaos that one sees thoughts that need to become enlightened. So do not be afraid of the chaos in your life! Rather than resist the chaos, we suggest that you embrace it with great love and welcome it. When your awareness of being and your sense of self can embrace the chaos in your life, you will then move into the conscious creative aspect of your being.

We are not suggesting that you seek chaos, you do not need to seek it. Chaos is a natural part of the creative process. When thought forms and feelings and actions no longer maintain their presence and are no longer needed, they start to dissolve. As they start to dissolve, the energy moves, and the sense of chaos enlarges. It is ever present. It is only when it grows to be the core focus that the moment has come that you are really ready to change.

It is like having a room in your house. You have shut this room for a while and you have cleaned the rest of the house. You have made the house stable and beautiful, peaceful, and serene and everything seems perfect. But you know, gnawing at your heart and gnawing at your consciousness, that there is a room upstairs that is not accessible to you because it has been locked up, and there is probably a lot of mess in it, and dust and chaos. When people come to visit you in your house, you show them all around the house that is clean and bright and sparkling, and yet if they ask to go into the room, you have to say no. Then they start to wonder, "What's in that room?"

It becomes amazing how the consciousness does not relax in the peaceful order, but starts to obsess and wonder about what's in the room. When you finally reach the point where the wondering is so great that you open the room and you turn on the light, you then come to a point of decision. For at that point, you see all the cobwebs and the dirt, and the dust, and the clutter -- all that does not match you in the moment.

You can either bring in more light, move it around, clean it up, and restructure, or you can shut off the light and run and lock the door again. If you shut off the light, and lock the door, there will never be any peace in the rest of the house for you'll always remember that that room is sitting there. It becomes the center point of control and eventually, the dust in that room goes under the door and starts to spread in the hall and down the stairs filling the rest of the house. Eventually it gets so great, but you're too terrified at that point to open the door. You have become ruled, you have become separated from your own ownership of the house.

We would suggest that you attend to the rooms in your that you haven't yet felt free enough to open and work within. When those rooms call to you and demand that you find them, that when you open them, remember to bring the light of your consciousness into the chaotic room. Bring the light within. Start to clean out what's there, and remember that your goal is to have that room accessible to your consciousness and to change the feeling in the house by having the room accessible to you. There are aspects of your being, that no matter how peaceful you become, no matter how quiet you become, are like little rooms in your consciousness that call to you to open the door. This is where you really affect your creative process in choosing to have the courage to open the door.

As you look around at your society, you find tremendous chaos. For truly there is tremendous chaos, there are a lot of rooms. There are a lot of aspects of society that no one has wanted to look at, no one has wanted to face. The pollution in those rooms is spreading throughout your society. And yet it is by gathering up the energy of your consciousness, the courage of your energy, the wisdom in your mind that you can face each of those chaotic aspects and go right into them. That is where the help and the vibrancy of your culture can come forth.

So do not be afraid of chaos! Don't worry about it. Chaos is perhaps the cornerstone, the point of focus, the greatest creative canvas for bringing beauty in your life.
